CARALETTA 2 Mail Intercepts

1. The latter photocopy transmitted with first reference proved to be very difficult to process. The office that has the responsibility bucked it back to us as "illegible" and we were forced to impose on a colleague from an adjacent desk, who is already overloaded. He reported back that, as far as he could judge: (a) the letter is not "illegible"; (b) it contains nothing of operational interest.
2. We are accordingly very reluctant to transmit to the colleague the fairly illegible item transmitted via the second reference, as it would be a considerable imposition.
3. Pending receipt of further instructions on the matter, therefore, we are simply holding these letters in the file on the theory that if, eventually, something sinister shows up in this man's security picture, the letters can be very carefully reviewed. Meanwhile, we have reviewed the third reference--the LOWMYER report on this man--which seems very favorable to his general security and appears further to reduce the need for close review of his correspondence at this juncture, as does the apparent imminence of his emigration to the United States.
4. As stated in HQGW 12999, we continue to be much interested in subject's activities and are looking forward to further reports similar to HQQA 31435 in content, along attention of [] []
